

MUDDIMAN COMMITTEE (1924)

In 1924, a nine-member committee was constituted under the chairmanship of Sir Muddiman to enquire about the dyarchy, instituted by the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms. The committee submitted its report in 1925. The majority report stated that the trials of the dyarchy system were not fair and adequate resources and time frame was not provided to check the validity of the system. It recommended the continuation of the system with the incorporation of only a few changes. The majority report actually constituted the views and opinions of the loyalists and officials. The Secretary of State for India took a note of the majority report and issued a statement that action would be taken based on the report. There was, however, a minority report as well as which consisted of opinions of other non-official Indians who had categorically opposed dyarchy and recommended the framing of a new constitution. This view was not justly presented by the Muddiman Committee.
